Every evening Nandu and his friends would meet at the village crossing...

Arre Nandu, you look a bit worried today, what's the matter?

Your wife didn't make good food or what?

Or did you have a hard day at work?

Don't laugh friend, that's the whole problem!

We should never give women too much freedom...

You do look concerned, is everything all right?

Forget it, I am sick of all this...

What's the matter, friend?

This evening when I returned home from work I saw...

I waited for full 15 minutes... When my wife returned I asked her:

What sort of a joke is this?

On my way home I came across madam from the health centre...

Don't get angry. I had to go to the market...

She was saying that after my illness, I shouldn't work too hard...

Oh yeah!! Should I quit work to look after you?

- Did Nandu's friends advise him correctly?
- Does something like this happen in your home or around you?
- If yes, what would you do?
- Emphasise that hitting a woman, abusing or threatening her is violence and stress the fact that everyone is entitled to a life free of violence.
